INPO Perspectives and Activities to Enhance Supplier Human Performance and Safety Culture

Thursday 25 February 2016 14:00 (15 minutes)

Synopsis

Within their own organizations, utilities have made significant improvements in human performance and safety culture, supported by a strong community of practice through INPO and WANO. In recent years, utilities have been making increasing use of suppliers for design, construction, inspection and maintenance services in support of their NPPs. Many of these suppliers do not have the benefit of being members of a community of practice when it comes to human performance and safety culture. To help the supplier community make improvements similar to what the utilities have achieved, INPO has recently expanded its Supplier Participant program to address the issue of human performance and safety culture in the supplier community. The intent of this paper will be to share the INPO's perspectives and activities in helping suppliers of services and products to NPPs enhance their human performance and safety culture.
